Julia Greenham brings a comprehensive set of skills to her role as a consultant at Worklogic, having worked for over ten years as a lawyer (both as a Solicitor and a Barrister), with particular abilities in evidence gathering and analysis, strategic problem solving and dispute resolution.

Julia's previous experience includes working for two years at a leading national commercial law firm in their Workplace Relations Department. Her practice covered disputes and advice work relating to equal opportunity, discrimination and harassment, unfair dismissal and other employment law matters. She also conducted various training sessions for employers relating to such topics.

Julia then spent four years as a Solicitor/Senior Solicitor at the Victorian Government Solicitor's Office in the Litigation Department, where she handled a vast array of complex litigation disputes and inquests. Through this work, she developed an appreciation of the workings of complex governmental bodies and the need for clear and workable policies, codes of conduct, effective training and clear and detailed record keeping as part of best practice risk management.

Julia has been a Barrister at the Victorian Bar for over four years and continues to manage her practice there coupled with her work as a consultant at Worklogic. Julia has a varied and diverse practice at the bar, centring primarily on civil litigation (such as torts, inquests, disciplinary tribunals for unprofessional conduct at work). She has a keen understanding, through her practice as a Barrister of the need for effective risk management processes in organisations and the need for early and effective dispute resolution processes. Julia's experience as a Barrister, her strong analytical, communication and problem solving skills and understanding of issues such as standards of proof and procedural fairness/natural justice, provide an ideal set of skills for her work as a consultant at Worklogic.
